Alan Watt "Cutting Through The Matrix" LIVE on RBN:

Poem Copyright Alan Watt Jan. 8, 2010:

The Technique, Forsooth, Psyche-Morpheus Truth:

"When There is No Truth, No Right or Wrong
'cept What Governments and Experts Pass Along,
Then the Evil Eye Reigns, No-one Plucks,
New Priesthood Rules, Values in Flux,
Truth is Power's Expediency to Hold Rule,
Motivational Scientists Hold Up the Fool,
The Perfectly Indoctrinated for His Time,
His Gullibility to Be Yours and Mine,
To Be All Accepting, Be Not Disgusted,
Sublimate All Instincts, They Cannot BeTrusted,
Accept All Commands, Smile -- Perfectness,
All Hail Scientific Socialism, Political Correctness"

Hi folks,

I am Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on the 8th of January 2010.
For newcomers, look into www.cuttingthroughthematrix.com website, bookmark all the other websites I have up there for future use because sometimes the big ones go down and that way you can always download the latest shows with the alternate sites. Now remember there's www.cuttingthrough.jenknness.com, www.cuttingthroughthematrix.net, www.cuttingthroughthematrix.us, www.cuttingthroughthematrix.ca, www.alanwattcuttingthroughthematrix.ca and www.alanwattsentientsentinel.eu.

The 'sentinel' site has all the same audios for download. It also has the transcripts for download as well on a lot of the talks I've given over the years and you can choose from the various languages of Europe, download them, print them up and pass them around. And I always tell the people too that you are the listeners who bring me to you. No-one backs me here. The ads that you hear on this actual program, on RBN, get paid by the advertisers straight to RBN for the airtime, for the staff and their bills and their equipment for the broadcast itself and that's big bucks in itself too. So it's up to you to keep me going by buying the things I have for sale by going to www.cuttingthroughthematrix.com website and buy my books, discs and so on or you can donate to me. Remember too that you can always purchase the books as well through the donate button and Paypal button. Send me a separate email if you do so. And from the US to Canada a personal cheque is good. You can also get an International Postal Money Order at the Post Office in the US for Canada and you've got to stress the International one or they'll give you the internal-only one. The internal one is green so you'll know you've got the wrong one if it's green. The International sort of Communist one is a pinky red colour so you can't mistake them. And you can also use Paypal or cash or Western Union and I think they may have Moneygram in the US as well. Outside the Americas, same thing, Moneygram, Western Union, cash, Paypal. It's up to you how you want to do it. And for those that get the discs burned and passed to them, you can write to me [listed above].

As I say, it's up to you to keep me going and this is what I call my 'tin can', 'tin cup' 5 minutes of begging on the air, which is a bit ridiculous to do because I could get an awful lot of money if I just brought on the advertisers as guests. That's how most of the hosts make their money, but I don't and this is the way I go.

Now, this incredible New World Order, it's not so incredible at all. It's just that we're not taught the basics of the techniques that are used to bring in the 'large' society, the 'great' society. Many names for the same idea over the last couple of hundred years, well written about, and they use a word, a very simple word for all the methods and strategies that are used, and it boils down to something called 'technique', something that would drive you nuts if you tried to study what they mean at the top by 'technique'. They literally mention it in every second sentence for big thick books. It's so important to them.

It kind of boils down to, and this is a rough, rough idea really, of mine. What it boils down to is if something can be done, it will be done; if it's economically feasible and it serves a ruling elite basically, it will be done.

That's why it's mandated that we all get ration cards eventually, ID cards and all kinds of cards and then eventually, of course, your ID chip. We're being trained for the chip if people don't really get that point yet.

Back with more after this break.

Hi folks,

I'm Alan Watt and we're Cutting Through the Matrix just mentioning how they go on and on in the high economics fields, the really high economics fields, with something called 'technique' and even Lenin went on about it too about techniques, everything is technical in nature, and even organisation itself is technically produced and managerial classes are technical as well as they solve problems.

He also went into the material creation of things, distribution of things and how eventually they'd have to basically come into a new system for the whole world because the Capitalist system which funded him would overproduce and not everyone would be able to afford to buy things that they actually made, whereas under his idea, the new combined Socialist system, that we're going into right now, of Communism and Capitalism, and that was always the idea, as I say, that's why the Capitalists funded the Communist system, their antithesis, to bring in 'The Third Way', Socialism, world Fabian Socialism and that way supposedly they wouldn't get all the waste. And right now we're going through a period where we've to cut back on what they call waste, you see, as we get trained into the Socialist system.

Now, you'll find that there are substitutes for war and war also gets rid of what they call surplus, the surplus funds in government and keeps them borrowing from banks. Therefore the power structure is held together through again, the same 'technique' by substitutes for wars. We have wars on terror, wars on obesity from the UN, wars on drugs, wars on poverty, wars on everything under the sun. These have really taken over because they're very expensive to run, regardless of what they do or don't do or what they claim they can do or they actually can do and what the real reasons are, are really irrelevant to the whole object of it because the object is to simply have what appears to be a war, a very expensive war on a whole bunch of things. That's what all the crisis creation is partially about, training a generation into a new way.

In 2001, and I've said this quite a few times, when the towers got hit, I said you will see the whole warfare scenario. People moving around like they did in New Orleans eventually, like refugees being scattered across the country, resettled, people who will be on rations eventually and here it is in the news.

Now the BBC, the British Broadcasting Corporation, is owned by the British government but really it's higher than just the government. It's the British establishment, the government's a front. It's always been a front for the British establishment, the very wealthy, elite families that prefer to keep their names out of newspapers.

And I know at one time all recruited for the BBC were people from Eton to make sure that a particular class ran all propaganda and that was the function even when BBC radio started up, if you read its history, was for propaganda purposes especially in World War I.

They actually pioneered strategies along with the Tavistock Institute to try and get people into the war, young men into the war. H.G. Wells was recruited again by them. He worked for the Fabian Society at the same time and then The Royal Institute for International Affairs.

Wells was the guy who came up with the term 'The Hun' to demonise the enemy so they called them 'The Hun' and they came up with the drawing of a big helmet, that's all you saw was a helmet, a dark face like Darth Vader and a big bayonet and out came the slogans; 'The Hun in the sun' and 'Down with the Hun' and all that stuff. That was all propaganda to demonise the enemy by the BBC with the aid of people like H.G. Wells.

H.G. Wells also, being a good propagandist, found ways of getting young men to go into the military to get mowed down, generally on their first day in combat because whole regiments and whole areas, they're all recruited in their own areas, were mown down often in their very first contact with the enemy because they had to march across muddy fields, very flat, and it was hailing machine gun fire, just hails, constant hailing of machine gun fire and most of the regiments got wiped out in about 15 minutes. That was the 'great war' they called it. It was great for depopulation purposes.

H.G. Wells also wrote stories. One of them was about the white feather and he told every young girl out there, who had a fiancé or a boyfriend, to wear a white feather if their boyfriend would not join the military and go fight for Britain.

All these techniques, along with, say, the help of the Tavistock Institute, were used. Psychology was used to get people to go into the military. That was an awful, awful war. All wars are awful but we don't realise that we're never told the real truth for going into wars, never ever told the real truth until maybe a hundred years after the event and by that time other generations have grown up and they don't care.

The BBC as I say, have always been in the lead for propaganda purposes. That's their function whether it's entertainment, it's full of politically correct updates, what's now politically correct and what's out and all that kind of stuff.

Here's an article here from the BBC news, January 7th by Finlo Rohrer. It says;

"It's 70 years since WWII rationing..."

(A: Here you go, see. This is a trial balloon to get you to get it into your head.)

"... was brought in and many pass comment on the contrast between the current obesity epidemic and those healthier days of dearth."

(A: Healthier days they call them.)

"But how did people handle rationing and could we use the lessons to fight obesity now?"

On 8th January 1940, the UK tightened its belt and entered a period of privation that was to percolate through every layer of the national consciousness.

As the system gathered momentum, the ordinary ration came to encompass meat, cheese, butter, margarine, bacon and ham, tea, preserves, sugar and cooking fats such as lard.

There was also a separate points system for canned food, dry goods and other groceries. Clothing and petrol were also rationed.

But it is perhaps the food ration that looms largest in the nation's memory.

Every week the nation's housewives would queue with their ration books..."

(A: Just like they did in the Soviet Union by the way, if you wonder at the similarity of it all. Everything works together getting you trained.)

"... at shops they had registered with..."

(A: You had to register at a shop by the way to use your ration cards just there and then you'd get them maybe.)

"...to buy their allowances of groceries.

The man charged with making the nation accept the idea of eating less was Lord Woolton, a department store boss brought into the government as minister of food."

(A: Minister of everything, exactly from '1984', George Orwell. In fact George Orwell, in his own biography, mentions the fact that he was employed by the BBC. They brought him in to work in the food department on propaganda, for the Ministry of Food and he said that his job was to convince the ordinary housewives that the rubbishy food they were given, the stuff that wasn't fit to eat, was actually healthier for them and the scripts were all written for him to read off. So here they are at it again trying to tell us that it's best to go back this way.)

"Social rancour"

"Woolton had this genius for publicity," says Terry Charman, a historian at the Imperial War Museum who helped create the forthcoming Ministry of Food exhibition. "[The ministry] had a wonderful PR organisation..."

(A: Public relations, Bernays type.)

"...which thought up Doctor Carrot and Potato Pete.

"People welcomed the advice that was given..."

(A: They welcomed it of course.)

"...although some of it today looks very patronising.

Set against World War I, when there was often an atmosphere of social rancour over the idea that some people were doing well out of the conflict...

(A: Were they ever!)

"...the rationing of the next war (WW II) had a binding effect.

By and large it was accepted as part of the war effort."

(A: You see, they need these things for 'war effort', so we're in a war scenario, against 'terror' you understand and the flu and bankruptcy. What others terrors do we have coming down here?)

"It was a way of bringing the nation together."

(A: Oh, it's to bring the nation together through starvation.)

"Rationing meant that there was no avoiding the war," says Stewart Ross, author of Rationing: At Home In World War II."

And then the article goes on and on and on about, 'should we bring it back?' to fight obesity you see because the UN declared a 'war on obesity' and they go through all the pros and cons of bringing it back.

This is a trial balloon, predictive programming to get the idea into folks' heads that it's coming, and it is coming folks, it is coming. Not because we're short of food but because they want to eradicate; they've almost finished off every small farmer there is because they said that years ago they'd have to bring in a world of corporations, corporations and corporate farms only, the big boys, the big five.

Once they take over all the food supplies, then they'll have their wars with food you see, in short supply, which is also used remember as a punishment or reward idea according to the UN. They've said they used food before for warfare purposes, rationing food, and they'll do it again. That's what the UN said.

So, I'll put this article up at www.cuttingthroughthematrix.com at the end of the show just to let you read it for yourselves.

I keep stressing that there's not an article out there, that's there for you just to enjoy or for your actual intellectual titillation or education even. In a sense it's education, it's indoctrination and it's getting you ready for what's to come.

Now I've also mentioned about the 'new age'. The new age used to be the name of the free Masonic magazine for the Scottish Rite of Freemasonry back in the 1950s. It was called 'The New Age' and in one of their magazines they said it was their job was to bring in the 'new age', you know, the 'brotherhood of man' with a new spirituality and theosophy was right in with it too.

And the UN has its own unit for theosophy in there. They accept theosophy. Rockefeller's deeply into that himself (as are the) Rockefeller families. It's to encompass different religions, but mainly a form of Hinduistic, Buddhist type religion with some Pantheism tucked in with it, even Wiccanism's ok now.

It's harmless you see, it's harmless to governments because you won't have a united people standing up who have tenets of belief with their own laws of a God who'll fight them. So they love the 'new age', they created the 'new age', for this very time and I'll show you how it's being taught in Quebec schools when I come back after this break.

Hi folks. This is Alan Watt and we're Cutting Through the Matrix.

It's such a long, long, long, long war being waged against the old institutions that at least gave people some kind of cultural identity, a reason for living, being to get through the hard times, all that kind of stuff but especially the old religions that kept the families together which is so important because we all go through incredible crises in our lives and when you don't have a family to turn to you're really on your own.

Of course today they give you guidance counsellors and all kinds of counsellors and grieving counsellors and counsellors galore. They're so 'new agey' that a lot of the counsellors and psychologists today are really into the 'new age' and they burn incense and all that stuff and waft the smoke in your face and call down the good spirits and all that stuff and they call it psychology. But this is all, we don't realise that during the time of, I think it was one of the Russian Premiers that was in, they actually set up a team to go across America and Europe, a team of spies, you know, just quiet spies who observed things and one of their jobs, it was during Khrushchev's term, part of their job was to see how the 'new age' movement and the drug movement and all the rest of it, how it was taking off. Was it really taking off properly in the west? It was very important to them.

People will think, 'Well why wouldn't the Communists be pushing Atheism?' You see they do once they have conquered, but during the conquering process, they will use other religions even including the 'new age'; they were really behind that to bring down the old religions to replace them.

There's an old saying that you can take religion out of people but you can't take people out of religion, or vice versa. In other words, people will look for something else to believe immediately and they go shopping for religions and that's why the 'new age' is there with all the different stores if you're inclined this way, that way or that way, it's like giving you a manual of all the different things that they have, or a catalogue and you choose the one that suits you best. And of course in the 'new age' too there're no real rules to follow which means there's no cohesiveness against anything and that's why they promoted the 'new age'. It's all kind of self-centred, everything spins around you and it's all about you. You won't stand up because you have no deity with, 'here's the rules, here's the laws' and when your government contravenes those laws, you'll stand up together and now you're a threat and a force against the governments, they might just have to back off. Therefore the mainstream religions have been under attack for an awful, awful long time, longer than you can ever imagine.

Here's Quebec and this is from last year. It's from MercatorNet. It says, Thursday 15th January 2009.

"Quebec kids to learn Orwellian spirituality."

(A: Listen to this now.)

"An often-quoted Jesuit maxim boasts, "Give me a child until he is seven and I will give you the man."

(A: Then it goes on to say.)

"Only seven? Amateurs! Since September all Quebec students from primary school entry to high school graduation, whether enrolled in public or non-funded private schools, must attend Quebec's new Ethics and Religious Culture course (ERC). And teachers, regardless of their beliefs, must teach it."

Jonathan Gagne, a courageous teenager at the Joseph-Hermas-Leclerc secondary school in Granby, Que., has just been suspended, and will likely be expelled, for boycotting ERC. He is a hero to thousands of angry, mainly Catholic, Quebecers who consider compulsory submission to ERC a violation of their human rights."

(A: Of course it is, but again it's the UN mandate under Unesco. It says;)

"The ERC curricula are mandated to introduce students to Quebec's rich diversity of religious tenets and "facilitate the spiritual development of students so as to promote self-fulfilment."

(A: Now it goes on to say here something. People have to have it pointed out to them sometimes to make them think. It says;)

"Since when does the state "facilitate" spiritual self-fulfilment?"

(A: Is that the job of government? "Since when does the state "facilitate" spiritual self-fulfilment?")

"To parents who take religion seriously, this is a chilling intrusion into what all democratically inspired charters of rights designate as a parental realm of authority."

(A: And that again is what they're destroying, the parent's authority under the rights of the child again from this wonderful Communist organisation called the United Nations who are funded by the foundations and the bankers who rule them.)

"ERC was adopted by virtual fiat, its mission to instil "normative pluralism..."

(A: This is what it's called now in schools "normative pluralism".)

"...in students. "Normative pluralism" is gussied-up moral relativism, the ideology asserting there is no absolute right or wrong

(A: It's Cabala you see, Jewish Cabala actually. That's where it comes from.)

"...and that there are as many "truths" as there are whims. There were no public consultations.

The program is predicated on the worst possible educational model for young children: the philosopher Hegel's "pedagogy of conflict." As one of the founders of the ERC course, put it, students "must learn to shake up a too-solid identity"

(A: When you think, when you're starting to feel you know who you are, what you are, they're there to make sure they throw you right back again. 'I don't know what I am, oh God I don't know..' and that's what you see today. And it's part of what they're promoting too. You don't know what your sexual, you think you know what your sexual identity today is until they bring in these courses to tell you, 'Oh what's wrong? You might just be...if you haven't tried it, don't knock it. You might be homosexual or maybe you really want to be a transvestite or maybe you really, really want to be a woman'. You see? And that's what all this is about. There are no truths anymore you see, except what the government promotes. Amazing isn't it and here they are bringing in their own version of spirituality, government has banned everything else.

Back in a moment after this break.

Hi folks, I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix just reading an article to show you how, the 'new age' as they call it, this stuff, this thing that everyone thinks they understand but they don't really understand. They don't even know who promoted it, who created the 'new age', who mandated it from the top, what big foundations were behind it, even the fact that those in the foundations have a completely different religion from the one they're promoting for the public. It's quite something really but this is how you work and run and rule over nations and this is particularly to do with Quebec but it's for the rest of Canada too and the States as well.

In fact they've been teaching the visualisation. They start with visualisation. Parents don't think do they? 'Oh that's not too bad, not so bad. They all sit there and visualise. Well six months later they're visualising their 'power animal' coming down or their 'spirit guide' or something, then they're told to talk to them. So here they are talking to an entity from wherever and then 'let it come into you' and all this stuff. It's just the same thing.

It doesn't matter what particular brand of the 'new age' they call it, it's all to get to the same end. You'll find that always. It's like 'be possessed' in other words, bring down your 'power animal' or your 'power spirit' and all this kind of stuff.

They used to lock folk up for talking to themselves. Now of course you're told to bring something down and chat away to it. Anyway, this has been done through the school to destroy all the old religions that used to stand up.

You see, people don't realise that all, all institutions become corrupt eventually, including religious ones, including religious, no doubt about it, they become powerful institutions. But at least with Christianity, it gives the individual a lot of rights that no other system ever gave them. It also had to bow to the fact for the first time, especially Christianity, that each individual was technically sacred.

That had never been thought of before, ever, ever, ever. You were at the whim of all the Gods. Prior to Christianity the Gods played with you, you were just playthings and suddenly you got rights and suddenly you have a God given spirit from God himself within you with all these rights. It's like the charter of it all laid out, with a charter of rights.

And governments went to incredible lengths to get people and go for people and whole communities, whole countries would stand up behind people and say 'you can't do that, this person's got God given rights'. That's what God given rights means. So their idea was to demolish all those rights over a while, give you this mishmash instead and have you obey government that must be the only true power eventually, you see.

To go on with this article here, it says;

"The program is predicated on the worst possible educational model for young children: the philosopher Hegel's "pedagogy of conflict." As one of the founders of the ERC course, put it, students "must learn to shake up a too-solid identity"..."

(A: You mustn't have an idea of who you are. If you do have, it must be shaken and shattered, and it says;)

"...and (they must) experience "divergence and dissonance" through "le questionnement."

"ERC is to the grasp of authentic religion and spirituality as Esperanto to the comprehension of Spanish and English -- both are useless adornments, artificial rather than organic constructs. Worse, they may deflect forever the desire to acquire meaningful knowledge. "

"Reading ERC manuals and activity books, one finds a superficial mishmash of trendy theoretical platitudes whose cumulative effect will be to convince children that belief is fungible, and that all religions -- including pagan animism and cults -- are equally "true." The curriculum is strewn with politically correct material that openly subverts Judeo-Christian values. In many of the manuals, ideology and religion are conflated. Social engineering is revealed as the heart of the ERC program; in the most recently published activity book, for example, Christianity is given 12 pages, feminism gets 27 pages."

"No religious leaders are solicited for their views in this text, but Francoise David, the radical-feminist leader of the Marxist party Quebec Solidaire is "interviewed."

(A: She's the only one that gets interviewed.)

"Beside a large picture of Mme. David, benignly smiling, face upwardly tilted in the old Sovietic mode, the question is posed: "What would you say to those adolescents who don't feel concerned about feminism?" David replies: "[Adolescents] need a feminist analysis in their life."

Paganism and cults are offered equal status with Christianity. Witches "are women like any other in daily life;" "Technologically [the Raelians] are 25,000 years in advance of us."

(A: That's the guy who's a race car driver who was talking to all the aliens and he wants to get a pure-breed bred scientifically on earth to go off into space. Again, eugenics in another guise eh?)

"And considering that of the 80,000 ethnic aboriginals in Quebec only 700 self-identify with aboriginal spirituality (the vast majority of ethnic aboriginals are Christian), aboriginal spirituality (falsely equated with environmentalism)..."

(A: And it's true too that Indians were not the keepers of the environment.)

"...is accorded hugely disproportionate space and reverence."

And I'll put this article up as well for you to read. See, this is part of an ongoing, very old war, because they must break down anything that gave you at least, at least, personal dignity and personal rights where the state couldn't just pick you up, cut you up and sell off your organs like they're going to do very shortly, just like in China.

I'm not kidding folks, and as I say, Khrushchev sent out whole teams, these passive spies who just...and that was their job. That was their job to see how the 'new age' was taking off, along with all of the 'rock' phenomenon and the drug culture in the Americas and the western hemisphere to see if it was doing well because they were all part of it. And mind you, their pals in Hollywood were certainly helping it along and that's what Hollywood's job was and still is by the way, to guide us. They call themselves the 'culture creators' in Hollywood amongst themselves.

Onstar. Onstar, everybody hailed Onstar through its own PR when it came out, Onstar satellites. They could literally unlock the doors of your car and do all this stuff and tell you where you were like 'yeah, where am I? Oh why you're in the driving seat of your own car Mr. Smith', and that's hailed as a wonder to the world. And what they can also do too is lock you in your vehicle and keep you there until some special security guy has come.

I'll put their site up here because now they're coming out with new things as well. It says they can also slow down your car, in case it's stolen, mind you. It also means they can slow it down if you're driving it and they can stop it from moving at all, just cut off the ignition from a satellite. Well you know who's going to use all of that don't you?

Can you imagine when people eventually want to get out of the cities because there's another big fear, a coming pandemic or something, whatever, and what will they do? They'll just turn everybody's cars off, and there you are. It's amazing how everything will just fit together by chance, isn't it, on behalf of the big controllers at the top.

And you know all these x-rays that they're using now for these body scanners now that they've set up the incident, and that's what it was, it was a set up incident to get them all sold out to the public. There are concerns about cancers and all the rest of it but, 'Oh no, let's put that to the side, it's too important'. They've got to be able to see everybody in the bare scud, as they say, which is in the total nude.

This article here is from Technology Review from MIT, Friday October 30th 2009. What they use when they bombard you are 'terahertz waves' as they're called, 'terahertz waves', and it says here;

"A new model of the way the THz waves interact with DNA explains how the damage is done and why evidence has been so hard to gather"

(A: This is from last year, so they know this. They are going ahead with it anyway.)

"Great things are expected of terahertz waves, the radiation that fills the slot in the electromagnetic spectrum between microwaves and the infrared. Terahertz waves pass through non-conducting materials such as clothes, paper, wood and brick and so cameras sensitive to them can peer inside envelopes, into living rooms and "frisk" people at distance. The way terahertz waves are absorbed and emitted can also be used to determine the chemical composition of a material. And even though they don't travel far inside the body, there is great hope that the waves can be used to spot tumours..."

(A: There you have the other medical side of it.)

"...near the surface of the skin."

(A: Mind you they always promote something when they've got something on the go, again, 'technique' right? If it can be used, it will be.)

"With all that potential, it's no wonder that research on terahertz waves has exploded in the last ten years or so.

But what of the health effects of terahertz waves? At first glance, it's easy to dismiss any notion that they can be damaging. Terahertz photons are not energetic enough to break chemical bonds or ionise atoms or molecules, the chief reasons why higher energy photons such as x-rays and UV rays are so bad for us. But could there be another mechanism at work?

The evidence that terahertz radiation damages biological systems is mixed. "Some studies reported significant genetic damage while others, although similar, showed none," say Boian Alexandrov at the Center for Nonlinear Studies at Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico and a few buddies. Now these guys think they know why.

Alexandrov and co have created a model to investigate how THz fields interact with double-stranded DNA and what they've found is remarkable. They say that although the forces generated are tiny, resonant effects allow THz waves to unzip double-stranded DNA,..."

(A: They 'unzip' your double-stranded DNA

"...creating bubbles in the double strand that could significantly interfere with processes such as gene expression and DNA replication."

(A: Which means folks, that you'll come down with cancers. It says;)

"That's a jaw dropping conclusion.

And it also explains why the evidence has been so hard to garner. Ordinary resonant effects are not powerful enough to do this kind of damage but nonlinear resonances can. These nonlinear instabilities are much less likely to form which explains why the character of THz genotoxic effects are probabilistic rather than deterministic, says the team.

This should set the cat among the pigeons."

Meaning the scientific community, but we know it's not going to really because they've already gone ahead with it anyway because of some guy's dirty underwear, so we're told, so we're told.

Now, I keep telling people how the police forces have for years have been built up, these internal armies and dressed them with combat boots, still called police mind you. They gave them black ties. They used to wear blue ties and light blue shirts in Canada when they were the 'thin blue line'. Now they're the 'black executioners' and that's not by chance because black has always been the colour of the king's executioner. They wear the black hood, the black everything. Black symbolises death. It's meant to make you afraid. And it was back in the late '90s, suddenly across Canada and the States, all cops started wearing combat boots, black outfits, black ties, black shirts and even black gloves and black sunglasses too, of course, just to look 'cool'.

Well then they started calling the people civilians, not citizens anymore, you're civilian, meaning they're obviously part of a military establishment, which they are. Things have changed so quickly and I can remember when I first saw four of these cops walking down a little town in Ontario and I'd read it in the local paper that shortly people would see their local police trying out and familiarising the people, civilians sorry, with their new outfits. And I did, I saw four of them walking down the street and chatting away to each other and all that and what surprised me as I stood and watched, was that none of the locals were looking at them as if there was anything wrong. Then I realised that they've seen so much of this on TV in all the fictional stuff they're showing us, that they didn't notice the transfer. They did not notice the transfer. That's when your mind goes (Alan does the Twilight Zone intro) and you wonder where you are. Am I the only person who can see? But no-one else gave it a look.

Anyway, they get a completely different indoctrination as police now. They're told to be scared and paranoid of the public, sorry, the civilians, and they also treat them like...you see, the cops also watch all these shows on television. They've been raised watching these shows and they really do believe they are the law, like they are THE law.

This article here is from the Los Angeles newspaper. I'll put this link up too. It says here;

"TSA Agent..."

(A: That's the guys on the airport.)

"...Arrested at LAX"

(A: It says here, January 7th 2010.)

"They are the first line of defence in airport security but two troubling incidents involving TSA agents at LAX are raising concerns.

A TSA agent was arrested on January 3rd in Terminal One at LAX, a source told NBCLA. He had just gotten off duty and was behaving erratically, saying, "I am god,..."

(A: I am God, I am God, I am in charge, this sucker! I added the last part but he probably watches all those movies too. That's what he was telling them all. 'I am God, I am in charge' he says.)

Meanwhile, a TSA Internal Affairs investigation turned up evidence of LAX TSA agents using drugs at an after-hours party.

(A: All these guys, including the cops, are on steroids and uppers and downers and anything they confiscate, by the way, they pop themselves. Well known, well known. So what they disallow the public, they do to the extreme themselves, believe you me. So here's the TSA agents using drugs at after-hours parties and they're normally on duty the next day and acting like Schwarzenegger in a movie. That's exactly what they're doing, isn't it?)

"TSA officials say a videotape of the party was of poor quality..."

(A: Oh of course, suddenly whenever you want to see something it's a poor quality like Bin Laden. Is this really the fuzzy Bin Laden? It says;)

"...and the employees were not in uniform, but 4 employees were tentatively identified."

(A: I guess they were the latest additions to the crew. They always go first.)

"All 4 were tested for drugs. One came back positive and that employee was fired."

And then of course they released their PR, public relations spiel to try to convince the public that everything was ok, 'we're zero tolerance' and all that stuff, you see, which is just PR as I say, public relations.

Public relations now, remember it used to be called propaganda from Bernays who was one of the masters at it. Not The master but one of the big masters. He was taught as well by the same folk who taught the basic stuff to Freud, and Bernays of course was a nephew of Freud.

The new name really is 'public perception'. You bring in management teams for 'public perception'.

It doesn't matter what reality is, here's how to make the public perceive this reality that you want to give them. That's their job, to find out how to get it across to the public to give a different...remember what Marshall McLuhan said. He said "Perception, perception is reality".

However you perceive something becomes your reality. You think it is reality, even though 90-odd percent from the media, 95% maybe even 98% of what we get from the media and television and entertainment too, but mainly through the mainstream media, is really spun stuff, spun to leave you with a particular perception on different topics. It's just scientific socialism.

It's quite fantastic too. Now the US, again constant warfare right, we're in constant warfare mode, constant crisis now. It's a way to divest the countries of their excess money, keep them borrowing from the banks, in the absence of full-scale wars and the HHS, the health service of the US has delivered its first security strategy to the public.

Back with more after this break.

This is Alan Watt and we're Cutting Through the Matrix. I'm going to put these links up to this press release from the HHS, it's actually called the National Health Security Strategy for the US. It's just been released and I'll also put up the PDF link as well. That gives you the actual, all the stuff that they're putting through there, perpetual war's all in it basically.

Every possible scenario that could happen is going to be covered. Perpetual war from now on, that's the message until the 'brave new world' has come through its changes to get depopulated and all the rest of it up to 2050 and then they bring out their next phase of their super cities across the planet with the vastly reduced population. No nations anymore after that.

The UN itself will only be in existence for about 50 years once it's at full power.

Now we'll go to Sam in Sydney on the phones if he's there. Are you there Sam?

Sam: Hi Alan, looks like you could do with some global warming up there.

Alan: Well actually I've got a whole bunch of people together since we're going to pay such high taxes for global warming, I demand my share of it because I'm under all this snow, 20 below zero temperatures, I demand my share of global warming.

Sam: There's an amazing satellite shot of England at the moment. It just looks like it's an appendage of Antarctica. It's pretty incredible but it's interesting what you say about perception is reality.

When I first went to university, the first year that I went to university, I remember the lecturers were really pushing this idea of 'post modernism' and it was incredible because you know, at the time we were also being a member of Generation X being told that we were the most apathetic generation that's emerged and it's amazing to see the link between the two things when you don't have a truth, when everyone's truth is just as valid, as opposed to the perceptions of truth and just one truth and that somehow the truth itself becomes diluted.

Alan: In other words, it's just like there's no right or wrong, good or evil, then they'll say there's no truth.

Sam: Yeah, absolutely. It's interesting at the moment, talking to a friend in England because he was complaining about how cold it is over there. He believes in manmade global warming and he basically said "look it's called climate change now", he's come back with this, "it's called climate change now".

I had to point out to him that 'climate change', the term was actually created during the Bush administration to soften the whole thing...it actually came from the right and was actually to soften the whole idea of global warming and now it's been adopted by the left to explain how the climate keeps changing.

We all know the climate keeps changing. It's like 'well, what is the truth now'.

Is it about CO2 in the atmosphere or is it about the fact that we are polluting it? They seem to want to muddy up the whole thing.

And this is another thing. I've got a friend that grew up under...he escaped from communist Poland as a teenager and he was telling me a story about the fact that members of the Politburo would drive around in Mercedes outside of Poland but they had all these little mechanic shops within Poland itself converting these Russian made cars with [inaudible]. And I asked him about...how do you feel about Communism now? And his thing this was "look, it's just business and I thought that really that just summed it up. All of this is just business, isn't it?

Alan: It's just a more efficient form for the elite to control the world. It's far more efficient for them to be in control in a totally controlled, dominated society. That's right, that's why the bankers of the west funded the whole darned thing. Ha ha ha!

Sam: Absolutely. Bye Alan.

Alan: Well, thanks for calling. There're even places in Britain now that haven't been cleared of snow for 3 weeks or ice and they can't get anybody through to give them food. No kidding.

Climate change has always been here. Fifty years of cold, fifty years of warming, up and down like a yo-yo. It's NORMAL.

From Hamish and myself, from Ontario, Canada, it's goodnight and may your God or your Gods go with you.
